Studying desistance forces us away from static models of people as 'offenders', 'criminals' or 'prisoners' and encourages an understanding of change(s) in personal identities. It also brings to our attention the fact that today's 'young offender' is more likely to become tomorrow's 'new father' than tomorrow's 'habitual criminal'. As such, it implies valuing people for who they are and for what they could become, rather than judging, rejecting or containing them for what they have done.
